

Our Community and COVID-19

Living To Learn

While we understand that no priority is entirely exclusive, our first priority is the physical safety and well-being of our youth and our community above their economic and academic commitments.

In the framework of Maslow's Hierarchy, we continually welcome and strive for the opportunity for self-realization for our students, but the fundamental needs of a child within their direct living environment must be addressed before they themselves can effectively take full advantage of the opportunities intended to help them realize their self-value and life purpose.

Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs

In the context of the threat posed by COVID-19, we respect that the opportunity for kids to fully realize their potential may not be as accessible right now, and that is okay. It is paramount not to risk the physiological needs and safety of our children and our community for temporary advancement in areas that are not essential to survival and peace.

Before we can return to a full commitment of academic and personal growth for our students, we need to focus on first getting them safely through this critical time in our history.
